The Second Place

From the Springfield Republican.

A number of statesmen—distinguished and not so distinguished—have begun a fierce struggle to avoid being struck by vice-presidential lightning. Mr. Foraker, Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Beveridge, of the senatorial group, are already in the field. Each is a stern and unbending "anti," so far as second places are concerned. Mr. Hanna, of course, would adopt the same remonstrating attitude, were his name to be seriously considered. He might even use all the immense resources of the Republican national committee to compass his own defeat. For not even Mr. Roosevelt's anticipated success, in smashing the tradition that an accidental president cannot win a succeeding nomination for president has lessened the reluctance of presidential candidates to accept the secondary position.

As these men are sharp and shrewd in protecting their own interests and in advancing their own ambitions, they may judge accurately in deciding that Mr. Roosevelt's experience really does not alter essentially the situation. The maxim of American politics, that the vice-presidency is not ordinarily a stepping stone to the presidency, probably holds good. For, had President McKinley lived to finish his term of office, Mr. Roosevelt as vice-president would certainly have had to meet a competition for the next Republican presidential nomination much more formidable than he has encountered. It is, indeed, extremely doubtful if Mr. Roosevelt as vice-president could have so impressed the party as to have captured a majority of the next convention. He could not have counted on the support of Odell and Platt in his own state. Mr. Hanna, with his powerful grip upon Ohio and the South, would have been against him. Foraker and Fairbanks would have been presidential candidates themselves, and would surely have been able to keep Ohio and Indiana out of the Roosevelt column. Favorite sons would have sprung up in the farther West, such as Secretary Shaw of Iowa, whose presidential boom had already been started when President McKinley's death changed the face of things. In the political contest that would now have been raging but for an assassin, Vice-President Roosevelt's chances would not have been the best in the world. Now, it is upon an analysis like this that presidential aspirants in 1908 make their plans. The Roosevelt precedent affects them not in the least, because it represents an abnormal or very unusual combination of circumstances. It might be pointed out, also, that Mr. Roosevelt has not yet been nominated and elected president of the United States, although these anticipated events are generally regarded as beyond serious controversy.

While three assassinations and five deaths in the presidential office since 1840 form a peremptory reason for choosing strong, safe and able statesmen to the vice-presidency, it is probable that the office will always be avoided by men who aspire to the presidency itself. As soon as our government definitely assumed its partisan form on the retirement of Washington from the chief magistracy, this disinclination began to be manifested. In the presidential contest of 1796-97, when it was still doubtful, under the electoral system then in vogue, whether Jefferson would be chosen president or vice-president, Madison wrote to him: "You must reconcile yourself to the secondary, as well as to the primary station." The italics were Madison's, showing how much he feared lest Jefferson should decline the second place, in case he failed to secure the presidency. Jefferson did "reconcile" himself to second place, but, although he was incontestably the leader of his party, he came near losing the chief magistracy to Burr in 1800.

Some one fit to be president should be found every four years who will "reconcile" himself to the second place, as Jefferson did in 1796. Fortunately, fit men are not confined to those ambitious politicians who are perennial candidates for the presidency and who advertise themselves in trying to avoid the honor which the vice-presidency would confer on any American citizen. The best men are not necessarily the greediest self-seekers. It is possible always to place in the vice-presidency a person whose accession to the presidency would not cause a ripple of apprehension at home or abroad. He might not "strengthen the ticket" in the campaign so much as some demagog, or "fat-fryer," or war hero, but he would be excellent insurance for the country.

THE OSAKA EXHIBITION.

Consul S. S. Lyon reports to the State Department as follows concerning the Osaka Exposition:

The National Industrial Exhibition at Osaka has now been opened to the public for two and one-half months, and the attendance of the public and other indications prove that it will be the most successful of the five industrial exhibitions that have been held in Japan.

Japan has not yet had an international exhibition in the full sense of the term, but this year foreign countries have been granted a limited space to exhibit samples of their produce. It is curious that the two countries which have taken advantage of this to the greatest extent are both colonies, to wit, Canada and Netherlands India. The State of Oregon has a good exhibit, and Australia is included in the foreign section, though we believe the Government of that country would have largely participated had it been possible to allot more space.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE.

The following notice was posted the other day on the bulletin board of a famous London club: "Will the nobleman who purloined Cap's umbrella kindly deliver it to the hall porter?" A well known peer, taking umbrage at this slight on his order, accosted Cap—and demanded an explanation. "Well, you see," was the reply, "the rules state that this is a club for noblemen and gentlemen. I am certain no gentleman took my umbrella; hence there was no other conclusion to come to."

LONGEVITY.

One of the oldest families in the world, not in point of pedigree, but of longevity, is said to live in Bell county, Kentucky. Lewis Green is 93 years of age; his wife, Virginia Green, is 92 years old. They were married 73 years ago and went to live on a farm at the mouth of Gingham's creek, in a bend of the Cumberland river. They are still living in the same house to which they went as bridegroom and bride three-quarters of a century ago. They have 10 children, the youngest of whom is now 43, and there has never been a death in the family.

The 485,000,000 people of stock different from that of the governing country, and located in the Tropics, are divided into three great groups; East Indian, West Indian, and Africa. The East Indian, or oriental group, includes the British colonies of India, Ceylon, the Malayan Peninsula, Fiji and Borneo; the Dutch colonies of Java and Sumatra, and the French colony of Indo-China—all located comparatively near to the Philippines and having a population, climate and other conditions somewhat similar to those of the Philippines. The second group, the West Indian, includes colonies governed by the British, French, Dutch and Danish Governments; the third group, Africa and adjacent islands, includes territory governed by Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Portugal and Belgium.

HARD ON THE GIRLS.

A bachelors' club was formed in Waukegan, Ill., some time ago and one of the rules was that one member must marry every year. One has committed suicide, which does not speak well for the girls of Waukegan.

LITIGATION
MUST BE DISCISIVE

JUDGE DE BOLT THROWS OUT
MRS. MONTANO'S SECOND SUIT AGAINST CASTLE.

Judge De Bolt this morning rendered a decision in the second case of Mary J. Montano vs. W. H. Castle, a bill for an accounting for certain Maunakea lands. Mrs. Montano sued some months ago, alleging that Castle as her agent had taken an insufficient mortgage for a loan to W. C. Achi in the sum of $6,000. The case was taken to the Supreme court and decided against her, and then she began the present suit. Judge De Bolt's decision says that even if she had not authorized the defendant to make the deal in question she had subsequently ratified it, and adds the following:

"Upon an examination of the entire record I do not see how it is possible to avoid the conclusion that this point, as to the sufficiency of the mortgage, was considered and actually disposed of in the former adjudication. However, it is immaterial whether it was actually determined or not, because, to say the least, it certainly was incident to and essentially connected with the subject matter of the suit and could have been litigated."

"It is the policy of the law that there shall be an end to litigation and that when a matter has been once fully and fairly heard and judicially determined upon its merits it should not be reopened or subsequently considered as between the same parties."

De Bolt says that the point raised in the new suit is so connected with and involved in the former litigation that he is compelled to regard it as adjudicated and says that the fact that the point may now be brought forward for new reasons is immaterial. "Litigation should not be piecemeal. Equity and common justice as well as public policy and regular judicial procedure, forbid constant or repeated litigation of the same subject matter between the same parties."
